

INTELLEDOX – MAIL HOUSE INTEGRATION

Intelledox enables a seamless integration to a mail house provider for the easy generation of bulk ad hoc and scheduled documents. This Intelledox functionality allows dynamically generated documents to be passed directly to an organization’s mail house provider, significantly increasing the efficiency of the business process. Implementations involving Intelledox mail house integration also empowers business users to own the build and maintenance of their templates, and to have control of the management and scheduling of bulk document process and scheduling.

HOW INTELLEDOX CAN HELP

Intelledox can be configured to output a combination postscript, PDF, XML or CSV file, driven by the requirements and capabilities of the chosen mail house system. The files are packaged and sent to the mail house via an appropriate method, usually through a secure file transfer protocol (SFTP), as a single compressed file.

This data consumption process can be scheduled and triggered on a regular or ad hoc basis by a workflow call from an existing system or by Intelledox. The data can be automatically pushed through to Intelledox, or unlike many other solutions on the market, Intelledox can be configured to pull data from an organization’s existing content or records management systems.

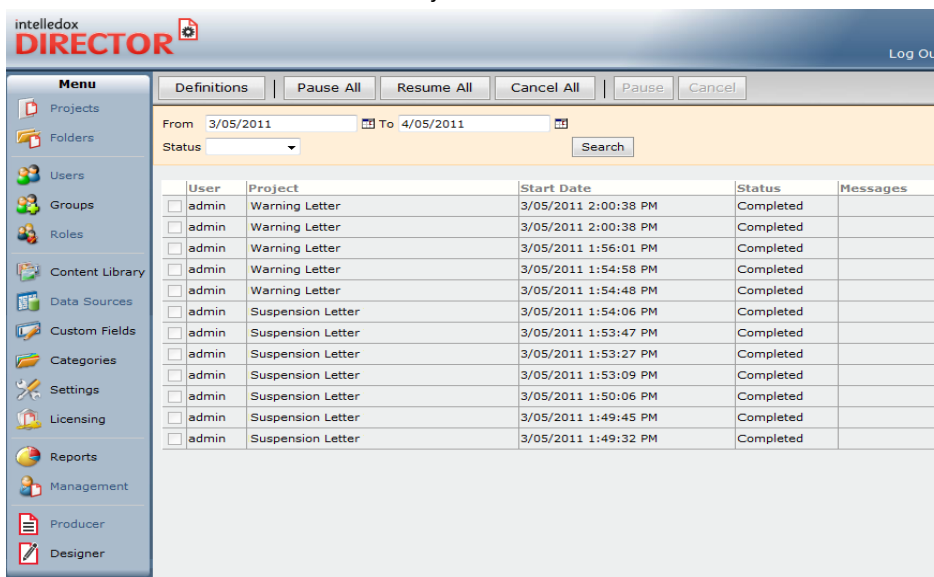

The bulk generation can be a regular scheduled event, configured by a user with the necessary access permission, such as warning letters and monthly invoices. Alternatively, an ad hoc bulk generated document run can be easily scheduled, such as a policy change notification mail outs to existing clients utilizing data sourced from a legacy system.

Throughout this process, Intelledox retains all its existing functionalities – allowing the business owners to control the generation of documents with dynamic content through a rules-driven wizard. The centralized management of content ensures strong information governance and a significant increase in business productivity and efficiency.
